NEW CENTRAL HIGH
TO BE READY OCT. 2

Postponement of School Opening Gives Time for Completion of Building.

STRUCTURE IS REGARDED AS SHOW PLACE OF CITY

Arrangements to Be Made for Inspection by Citizens of Washington During Fall and Winter.

Washington's finest high school building, the new Central High School, 11th and Clifton streets northwest, according to the present rate of progress will be ready for opening October 2, when the other public schools of the District resume their session. Had the schools been opened September 18, as was originally planned, it would have been necessary to postpone the opening of the new building, but the general delay permits it to open with the rest.

While residents of Washington who have seen the new high school building from the outside have a feeling, probably, that this building is something "out of the ordinary," it is only by a thorough inspection of it, inside and out, that one appreciates the many things which make new Central not only the finest school building in this city, but, indeed, one of the finest in the world.

Arrangements whereby interested citizens may be enabled to inspect the building probably will be made during the fall or winter, after conditions become "settled." New Central undoubtedly will prove one of the "show places" of Washington—an added attraction for the National Capital.

"The School on the Hill."

New Central has been called "the school on the hill." Its right to that title is easily proved when one looks south from the grounds, upper stories or roof. It is doubtful if any other point in Washington offers a view which surpasses that obtained from Central and equals it.

It is only upon entering the building that the true magnificence and magnitude of new Central are realized. From a stately entrance one steps almost directly into an auditorium which has a seating capacity equal to that of any theater in Washington. The stage is about equal in size to that of the average theater, but the size of the proscenium arch is surpassed by only one in the world—that of the Drury Lane Theater, London.

The auditorium is so arranged that students may pass into either the main floor or balcony, or past the hall from one part of the building to another, without interfering with students in other parts of the building.

Classrooms are ample, well lighted and well ventilated. The school has an indirect heating plant—said to be one of the largest of its kind in the world—of which a part is a gigantic ventilating system, capable of furnishing thirty cubic feet of fresh air per pupil per minute.

Rooms Are All Large.

While one of the most impressive things about new Central seems to be the large size of rooms and corridors, efforts have been made to make the building cozy and homelike. An example of this is found in the library, where a large fireplace with gas logs occupies one end. On the mantelpiece is a clock of homelike design, run by electricity. Laboratories are furnished both for experimental work by the students themselves and for demonstrations. The latter type have elevated seats so that all may see easily.

One room has been designed especially for music—an unusual feature for Washington high school buildings. The drawing rooms are designed according to the latest ideas.

Athletics in all forms receive a prominent place. Two gymnasiums are provided—one for boys and one for girls. That for the girls has a balcony at either end, where spectators may witness games and contests.

New Central is the only high school in Washington provided with a swimming pool, which is one of the finest of its kind in the country. Shower baths and similar facilities are near at hand.

Stadium Has 6,000 Seating Capacity.

An indoor cinder path, nearly one-quarter of a mile in length, is another feature. The stadium furnishes abundant room for outdoor sports and has a seating capacity for 6,000 spectators. A quarter-mile cinder path runs around the outside rim of the field.

At another point several tennis courts are provided. The lunchroom is unusually large and has a kitchen adjoining, making it one of the best to be found in any school in the United States. A lengthy counter, with steam tables placed at convenient intervals, provides excellent facilities for quick service. Two courtyards, by means of which light is furnished from the center of the building, so that all rooms are assured of abundant illumination, are finished with fountains of artistic design and marble benches.

The biological laboratory is worthy of particular mention, because it not only is modern in every respect, but has adjoining it a large conservatory where experiments may be made and observations carried on. A large aquarium is located in the conservatory.

There are many other interesting features—natural training shops, office rooms for the principal and the dean of the girls, the pipe organ, which is to be installed in the auditorium, the alumni room and many others. New Central is such a large building it probably will take some time before even the students in the upper classes learn all of the "short cuts" between its various rooms and corridors. To appreciate the size, construction and facilities, and the faculty, headed by Principal Emory Wilson, is planning to make it big in aspirations and accomplishments.

NO OYSTERS; FEW MELONS.

But Dealers Are Waiting for Shipment of Maturing Fruit.

There were no oysters and less than 500 watermelons late yesterday afternoon at the wharf market. Melon dealers, however, say the season is not yet over.

According to letters received from the melon growing sections along Chesapeake bay and the lower Potomac, late planted watermelons are now maturing. It is figured that melon-laden vessels will be arriving for the next two or three weeks.

The late melons promise to be exceptionally fine and large. Little fear is felt of frost coming before they are ready for the market. Heavy frosts in the melon-growing section seldom occur before November.

The melon season has been a good one for the producer. There has been no overabundance, and all that were brought here sold at prices that well paid producer and handler.

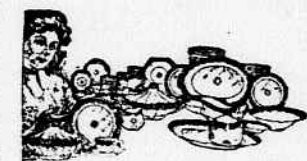

It has been shown that deafness is more common in cold countries than in warm climates, the ear being very sensitive to atmospheric changes.
